CONCORD — If you passed by the New Hampshire Statehouse on Tuesday, you may have noticed something peculiar.

Alia Mackenzie (<https://twitter.com/StatelessAlia>) held a large sign with the message "Anal Sex" written on it, welcoming anyone passing by on North Main Street.

Why would someone hold a sign that says "Anal Sex" in front of the statehouse? For "My love of freedom of speech," Mackenzie said.

This isn't the first time she's made her statement. She's been sign holding for a few weeks.

Mackenzie has exercised her support for the First Amendment in Washington D.C. and has even stood on the Canadian border with a sign that said "Canada Sucks."

"I might go on a 40 state capital tour," she said.

Mackenzie told NH1.com that the response she's gotten has been "mostly positive, few negative, and a couple of really hostile people."

Mackenzie has some controversial views about the U.S. government.

She also says that because of this, her voice has been kept out of the press, which explains her passionate support for the First Amendment.

Originally from Washington, Mackenzie is in New Hampshire looking for a new home.
