KENILWORTH, New Jersey — When a high school contacted police about human poop appearing on their grounds daily, they didn't know it was a superintendent.

Holmdel Township Police Department arrested Thomas Tramaglini, 42, of Matawan, New Jersey, and charged him with lewdness, littering and defecating in public after he was caught pooping on Holmdel High School's property.

The Holmdel School Resource Officer was alerted by the staff at Holmdel High School that they were finding human poop on or near the area of the high school track and football field regularly.

After monitoring the area, authorities determined Tramaglini was responsible for pooping on the field, police said.

Tramaglini is the superintendent of Kenilworth Public Schools.

Tramaglini was appointed the Kenilworth Public Schools superintendent in December 2015.

Tramaglini asked the school board for a paid leave of absence from his position due to the circumstances. They granted his request. Brian Luciani, the director of academics, has assumed the responsibilities of the office of superintendent of schools.

Earlier today, we learned of municipal court charges facing our current superintendent of schools in Holmdel, NJ. Given the nature of those charges, he asked for and was granted a paid leave of absence. (Leaves can only be without pay in the face of indictments or tenure charges, as a matter of state law.)

Effective immediately, Brian Luciani, our Director of Academics, will assume the responsibilities of the office of superintendent of schools. The Board of Education wants t... See More
